Update: Our reviewer has revealed that The New Netflix series Space Force by Steve Carell and Greg Daniels manages to mine plenty of comedy from the strange and occasionally terrifying place America is currently in. Read the full overview of space forces for more. The new Netflix series Space Force arrives on the streaming service on Friday 29 May. Space Force is from the same minds as comedy favorites like Office and Parks and Recreation and stars big names like Steve Carell, Ben Schwartz, Lisa Kudrow and more. Just like The Office, Space Force will be a workplace comedy - this time focusing on employees of the new U.S. military subsidiary. The series follows Carell, who plays four-star General Mark R. Naird, as he moved his family to a remote location in Colorado to lead a team of researchers and scientists. Friends alum Kudrow will play Carell's wife. Steve Carrell and Ben Schwartz in Space Force Netflix The cast also features John Malkovich, Diana Silvers, Tawny Newsome, Jimmy O. Yang, Noah Emmerich, Alex Sparrow and Don Lake. Office was the most watched series on Netflix in 2018, and although it is leaving the streaming service in January 2021 to live exclusively on NBCUniversal's Peacock, the cast and space force concept could be a promising replacement. The idea for space forces was initially announced in January 2019 after President Donald Trump announced the sixth branch of the military tasked with protecting the US and its allies in space. Steve Carrell leads the All-Star lineup. Aaron Epstein/Netflix Trump's idea was initially met with a combination of excitement, fear and mockery. Trump officially made the United States Space Force (USSF) branch of the military on December 20th by signing into a $738 billion defense bill. It's been a year in the first years for the USSF since it officially became an offshoot of the military. In February, the USSF quietly conducted its first test launch of an unarmed ballistic missile capable of a nuclear attack across the Pacific Ocean. The USSF also launched a military communications satellite into space last month, which was the first time a new military branch had actually gone into space.

Space Force editors' recommendations reunite the two legends from the Office. Steve Carell (who played Michael Scott) created the series with Office showrunner Greg Daniels. It's a parody of a very real new branch of the military. Space Force, which is dedicated to getting boots on the moon by 2024. Workplace comedy isn't The Office 2.0, but what it lacks in some areas it makes up for with less star power. The space force outflow is full of A-list talent. Some of the stars of the show are huge but appear in small roles, because there are only so many characters who help Space forces and the military arm it's under. But while packed with longtime actors, the series also features some rising stars in the lead roles. Mark Naird's daughter (Carell) is played by an actor who has only been in a professional acting game since 2018. The end result is a Carella-led comedy ensemble, which manages to outshine even powerhouses like Friends' Lisa Kudrow and Parks and Rec star Ben Schwartz. When there's so much talent in the room, someone will always cast a shadow.
